

Mission Statement

The mission of the Denver Women's Commission is to promote the social, economic, and political quality of life in Denver by assisting women in the attainment of equality and full opportunity.

The Commission advocates for women. It empowers women through coalition building and disseminating information and sharing community resources. The Commission monitors and recommends legislation and proposed policy changes affecting women.

PURPOSE

- To encourage women to participate in the political and civic processes
- To recommend procedures, programs or legislation to promote and ensure equal rights and opportunity for women
- To inform women's organizations about proposed legislation
- To research areas of current interest to women

HISTORY

On March 20, 1984, Mayor Federico Peña held a public forum on women's issues. Many of the 300 people who attended supported formation of a local women's commission.

Councilwomen Cathy Reynolds and Nieves McIntire sponsored the ordinance which established the Commission in March 1985.

STRUCTURE

The Denver Women's Commission is part of the City of Denver's Agency for Human Rights and Community Relations.

Fifteen volunteers serve on the Commission – twelve women and three men. The fifteen Commissioners are representative of the diversity of the Denver community and includes two City employees.

Commissioners are appointed by the Mayor and confirmed by City Council. The Commission is staffed by a Director and receives support from the Agency for Human Rights and Community Relations. One member serves on a agency-wide inter-commission Advisory Board.
